Counting Amur tigers

Russia has begun counting how many Amur tigers are still in the country's Far East. This species of tiger is in danger of extinction. Amur tigers live in Russian forests along the Amur river. They can grow to be as long as three meters.

Ten years ago, there were around 500 Amur tigers in that region. Now, Russian officials want to find out how many of them there are left. A team of researchers will track footprints of the tigers in the Vladivostok region to try to find the gender and age of the tigers.

"Amur tigers are precious animals for Russia. We have to protect them by any means" said Pavel Fomenko from the World Wide Fund for Nature.

The results will be made public in May. After that, officials will try to find ways of protecting the Amur tiger population.
